Priceless Dead Sea Decalogue Given to Unitarians By Member Is Earliest Copy

A Unitarian church in New York has acquired a portion of the Dead Sea Scrolls containing what is believed to be the earliest copy of the Ten Commandments in Hebrew. The acquisition — considered a major coup in Palestinian archaeological circles — came about through a combination of luck and high-level "cloak-and-dagger" work on a religious plane.

The Decalogue scroll, said to be in perfect condition, was purchased by a member of the Unitarian Church of All Souls, Lexington Avenue and Eightieth Street, in New York who prefers to remain anonymous, says the New York Times. It cost "several thousand dollars," but is now regarded as priceless by the Rev. Walter Donald King, minister of the church.

The story of how the scroll came into the possession of the church goes back to last spring when Dr. Frank M. Cross Jr., Professor of Old Testament at Harvard University, gave a series of lectures on the Dead Sea Scrolls at All Souls. He noted that the documents, discovered in 1947 by Bedouin herdsmen near the west coast of the Dead Sea, predated by 1,000 years all other Hebrew codices.

In passing, Dr. Cross remarked that some fragments were available for purchase. Subsequently, the unidentified church member made a substantial contribution to obtain the "fragments." The money was cabled to Dr. Cross, who was then in Palestine. With the aid of the Rev. Roland de Vaux, a Roman Catholic priest, the Harvard scholar began negotiations.

They were completed under "mysterious" conditions, Mr. King reported. He noted that the payment was made at the height of the Middle East crisis last summer and required a carefully planned rendezvous in the shady areas of the black market. When the scholars saw the "fragments" they knew they had struck it rich, says the New York Times. A few words of Deuteronomy showing around the edges of the rolled document gave them the clue.

Later, when the manuscript was placed in a humidifier and unrolled, the complete Decalogue was revealed in an excellent state of preservation.

Because of regulations imposed by the Jordanian Government, the church's scroll cannot be removed from the Palestine Archaeological Museum at Jerusalem. It will be made available, however, to Biblical scholars for study and will be known as "The All Souls Deuteronomy."

Photographs of the manuscript are being prepared, Mr. King said, for later publication by Dr. Cross and Msgr. Patrick Skehan, of Catholic University. Mr. King observed that experience had proved it unwise to distribute advance pictures because "sensational preliminary translations" had often marred earlier disclosures of Dead Sea documents.

"It is interesting," Mr. King commented, "that a Hebrew manuscript should have been purchased by a Frenchman and an American — a Roman Catholic priest and a Presbyterian — from Moslems, to be deposited in a museum in an Arab country, with funds made available through a Unitarian church, during a severe political crisis.

"Such are the ways of God and men. We are proud to have had a hand in this significant discovery and purchase. All Souls is particularly grateful to the donor." He added, says the New York Times, that it would be equally interesting to ponder the possibility that Christ could have read the document now owned by All Souls.

Great Woman Benefactor Gave Millions In Charitable Gifts; Was Named One Of Six U. S. Builders Of Israel

Mrs. Frieda Schiff Warburg, who with her husband, the late Felix M. Warburg, contributed heavily to the support of philanthropic and cultural activities, died at White Plains, N. Y., in her sleep after a long illness. Her age was 82 years.

Mrs. Warburg died at Meadow Farm, the home she retained on Woodlands, her former estate. Two years ago she donated 150 acres of the estate to the Union Free School District No. 8 of the Greenburgh Board of Education for the construction of an educational and cultural center known as the Warburg Campus, says the New York Times. An elementary school already is in session on the property.

Charitable gifts exceeding $2,970,000 were made by the will of Mrs. Frieda Schiff Warburg. The will was filed for probate in the Westchester County Surrogate's office. The estate was valued at $9,100,000. The bulk of her estate was left to relatives, with friends and servants receiving smaller bequests.

The daughter of the late Jacob H. Schiff and the former Therese Loeb, she was born in New York on February 3, 1876. Mrs. Warburg was one of the first graduates of the Brearley School in New York. Her father and husband were partners in the investment banking firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., of which her grandfather, Solomon Loeb, had been the first partner. Her brother was the late Mortimer Schiff.

After her marriage on March 19, 1895, Mrs. Warburg became active in philanthropies supported by her family. Interested in the welfare of youth, she was named acting president of the Young Women's Hebrew Association in 1922 and president in 1927. In 1946 she became honorary president of the Young Men's and Young Women's Hebrew Associations.

Mrs. Warburg gave her former home at 1109 Fifth Avenue to the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, of which she was a director. Although the gift was made in 1944, war delayed the opening of the Jewish Museum in the six-story Gothic mansion at Ninety-second Street until 1947.

The gift, Mrs. Warburg said, was an affirmation of her faith in the fundamental traditions of Judaism and the contribution they can make to the solution of present-day problems.

In 1949, Mrs. Warburg became honorary president of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem and established a $100,000 fund there in memory of Dr. Judah L. Magnes, president of the University, to be used for medical fellowships at the Hebrew University-Hadassah Hospital in Jerusalem.

Hadassah, the Women's Zionist Organization of America, honored Mrs. Warburg on her sixtieth birthday in 1938 with a party attended by 2,000 persons in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. After her husband's death on October 20, 1937, she succeeded him as honorary chairman of the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, which he and her father had helped to found, says the New York Times. She also took his place as vice-president of the Jewish Welfare Board.

On her seventy-fifth birthday, Mrs. Warburg established a revolving fund for the housing of immigrants wherever needed in Israel. Two years ago a home for the aged was named for her in Nathanya. The home is administered by Malben, a J. D. C. agency that cares for sick and handicapped immigrants.

The Hebrew Union College of Cincinnati bestowed upon Mrs. Warburg the honorary degree of Doctor of Hebrew Letters in 1945. She also received that year the first honorary degree of Doctor of Humane Letters conferred upon a woman by the Jewish Theological Seminary.

In 1952, Mrs. Warburg was named by the Palestine Economic Corporation as one of six American "builders of Israel." Two years ago she was honored by the World Brotherhood movement. She was then 80 years old and, to mark her birthday, she set up a special fund for gifts in the field of geriatrics, the study of aging.

A friend of Lillian D. Wald, founder of the Visiting Nurse Service of the Henry Street Settlement, Mrs. Warburg helped to raise funds for that center. With her husband she set up the Felix M. and Frieda Schiff Warburg Foundation to support civic and social welfare, music and the arts,

Court In Berlin Orders Firms And Regimes To Revive Pensions Seized By Nazis

The Supreme Restitution Court ruled at Berlin Germany, that rights of Jewish executives to pensions from Berlin industries were not destroyed when the Nazi regime took over the supporting funds.

The court is composed of seven judges. Justice Frederic R. Sanborn, a New York lawyer, is the United States member. The president is Torsten A. Salen, of Sweden, and the other members are from Britain, France, and West Germany.

The court was established by the four countries in 1953 to decide appeals from two lower courts in cases involving restitution of property to victims persecuted because of race, creed, nationality or political belief, says the New York Times. The court, an international body that is the highest authority in Germany in cases arising from restitution laws, decreed that the German Reich and its successors should pay for pensions due until the end of the regime in 1945 and that thereafter the companies involved were responsible.

In March, 1942, the Nazi regime ordered companies that had pensioned Jewish executives to surrender funds equal to the total amount that presumably would be paid to these persons and their heirs.

The rulings published were sought in seven cases that resulted from this action by Hitler's Reich. Claimants for payments reside in the United States, Brazil, Britain, Chile, France, Israel, South Africa, Sweden, and Berlin.

A case that involved all aspects of the court's ruling was that of Mrs. Clara Birnholz, of Putnam Valley, N. Y. She made her claim as the widow of Dr. James Birnholz, who died in the United States in 1956.

After employment beginning in 1897 by the Allgemeine Elektricitaets Gesellschaft, a leading German electrical equipment concern, Dr. Birnholz was retired in 1932. His wife left Germany in November, 1938, and he departed in June, 1939. The Nazi regime directed the concern to pay the capitalized value of the pension to the state in 1942.

The Supreme Restitution Court ruled that the German Reich owned Mrs. Birnholz 204,750 Reichsmarks in pension payments for five and a quarter years, from 1940 on. Under post-war currency rates, the amount became 20,475 Deutsche marks ($4,900), plus 25 per cent interest.

West Berlin's finance office was represented in the case in place of the German Reich and presumably will pay what is due, says the New York Times. The court ruled that the concern was obliged to continue the pension for years not covered by the restitution. In effect, the court told the company that it, too, had been persecuted when it was compelled to yield the pension fund but that it must obtain redress from the state. The concern had informed the court it paid Dr. Birnholz a pension from 1950 on. Mrs. Birnholz pressed no claim against the company.

Yale Jewish Alumni Honor University Chaplain

The Friends of the Yale University Hillel Foundation, an organization of Yale alumni of Jewish faith, has established a new lectureship at Yale in honor of the Rev. Sidney Lovett who retired last June as University Chaplain. The new Lovett Lectureship will bring to the campus each year an outstanding authority on Judaism. Dr. Bernard A. Rogowski, of New Haven, president of the Friends of the Yale Hillel Foundation, said that the lectureship is being endowed with the proceeds of a dinner given last March by the "Friends" in honor of the Rev. Mr. Lovett.

The former Yale chaplain, known to generations of Yale alumni as "Uncle Sid," organized the first program of religious counselling for Jewish students at Yale in 1933, the year after he joined the faculty. This counselling program evolved into the present Hillel Foundation Chapter at Yale. Sponsored by Bnai Brith, the Hillel Foundation has organized chapters of Jewish students at colleges throughout the nation.

"Uncle Sid" was the Yale University Chaplain and Pastor of the Church of Christ in Yale since 1932. In addition, he was Theodore Woolsey Professor of Biblical Literature and was Master of Pierson College, one of Yale's undergraduate residential colleges. He was an ex-officio member of the Board of Directors of the Friends of the Yale Hillel Foundation since its establishment. At present he is in Hong Kong serving as representative of the Yale-in-China Association at New Asia College. The college, which has a faculty and student body composed mainly of refugees from the Chinese mainland, receives support from Yale-in-China, which financed the cost of the college's new building. The first Sidney Lovett Lecture at Yale will be delivered during the current academic year.

GREAT WOMAN

and to improve intergroup relations.

Mrs. Warburg was a patron of the arts. Many musical premieres were given at her home. She presented to the Metropolitan Museum of Art and Vassar College paintings and sculpture from the extensive collection left by her husband.

She was active also in the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of New York, which her husband helped to found, says the New York Times. Among her other interests were the Solomon and Betty Loeb Memorial Home for Convalescents, Montefiore Hospital, the Bronx; the United Jewish Appeal of Greater New York, and Congregation Emanu-El.

Surviving are a daughter, Mrs. Carola W. Rothschild; four sons; Frederick M., Gerald F., Paul F., and Edward M. M. Warburg, chairman of the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee; eleven grandchildren; and twenty-two great-grandchildren.

The residuary estate was divided into four parts, one each going to a daughter, Mrs. Carola W. Rothschild; and two sons, Gerald F. and Edward M. M. Warburg; and the remaining part being divided equally between two granddaughters, Felicia Sarnoff and Jill Maass. Cash requests to relatives ranged up to $375,000 each and to servants, up to $15,000 each.

The Felix M. and Frieda Schiff Warburg Foundation, a philanthropic and educational corporation supported for many years by the Warburgs, received $2,500,000 and Mrs. Warburg's home in Palm Beach, Fla.

Other beneficiaries included the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of New York, $100,000; American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, $50,000; Negro education, welfare, and service institutions, to be selected by the executors, $50,000; and the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, $50,000.

Also, Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, $25,000; United Hospital Fund, $20,000; Visiting Nurse Service of New York, $20,000; Hebrew University Association, for the use of Hebrew University-Hadassah Medical School, $20,000; and American Friends of the Hebrew University, for general purposes of the university, $20,000.

The American Fund for Israel Institutions received $20,000; Hadassah, for Youth Aliyah work, $10,000; Young Men's and Young Women's Hebrew Association of New York City, $10,000; National Jewish Welfare Board, $10,000; and the Solomon and Betty Loeb Memorial Home for Convalescents, recently at Eastview, $10,000; and the Girl Scout Council of Greater New York, for Scout promotion throughout the state, $10,000.

Also, White Plains Hospital Association, $10,000; other Westchester County charities to be selected by the executors, $10,000; New York Association for the Blind, $5,000; New York Guild for Jewish Blind, $5,000; Maternity Center Association of New York, $5,000; New York League for the Hard of Hearing, $5,000; and the Brearley League of Brearley School, New York, for teachers' pensions, $5,000.

The will records $2,200,000 in charitable gifts to institutions by Mrs. Warburg in her lifetime, says the New York Times. Listed in addition were recent gifts of $350,000, as well as her home at 1109 Fifth Avenue, New York, to the Jewish Theological Seminary for the Jewish Museum.

10-Year Secret Quest For Degree Revealed At Death

Mrs. Minna Marx, fifty-one-year-old secretary to Dr. Buell G. Gallagher, president of City College, died at her home, 540 St. John's Place, Brooklyn, N. Y., after a long illness. The death of Mrs. Marx brought to light her ten-year struggle to achieve a college degree. Mrs. Marx registered at the Baruch School of Business at 23d and Lexington Avenue, New York, under her maiden name of Minna Moses, and continued her courses nightly through the years without the knowledge of her superiors or friends.

She was finally to graduate and attain her coveted parchment of Bachelor of Business Administration last June, magna cum laude, says the New York Herald Tribune. Last May, Mrs. Marx fell ill with cancer and was taken to Harkness Pavilion. It was then that Dr. Gallagher discovered her secret on the eve of her expected graduation. She could not be moved, and Dr. Gallagher presented the diploma to her at the hospital a few months before her death.

Mrs. Marx had served under two City College presidents. She had been secretary to Dr. Harry N. Wright now president emeritus from 1947 to 1952, and under Dr. Gallagher since 1952.

She had been a city employee for thirty-two years. She had worked for the Board of Transportation in secretarial capacities from 1926 to 1938, after which she was employed in the office of the Board of Higher Education. She remained in this post until she assumed her secretarial duties in the City College president's office in 1947.

Surviving are her husband, Benjamin Marx; and two brothers, David and Hyman Moses, both of Brooklyn.

Five Groups Of Talented Israelis To Tour U.S. For Z.O.A.

Auditions of several hundred Israeli artists held in the ZOA House in Tel Aviv resulted in the selection by Ed Sullivan, noted TV personality, of five acts for a U.S. tour under ZOA auspices and for appearance on his Sunday night's CBS television program on November 2. Jacques Torczyner, ZOA administrative vice-chairman, said that those selected for the "Ed Sullivan-ZOA Caravan of Israel Stars" will include 12-year-old violin virtuoso Yitzhak Pearlman, a polio victim; the Yonatan Carman folk dance troupe of five boys and five girls; folk singer, Nehama Hendel, of the "Batzol Yarok" troupe, and her accompanist, Menahem Lazarovitch. (Miss Hendel was the female lead of the "Pillar of Fire", the film recently made in Israel by Larry Frisch, son of the late ZOA president, Daniel Frisch); Bracha Eden and Alexander Wilkowirsky, duo-pianists; and Albert Almoslino, young scientist, who gained international renown by his specialty of shadow caricaturing, reviving the popular 19th century pastime of "candle silhouettes".

Ed Sullivan made his first visit to Israel at the invitation of the Zionist Organization of America to select the Caravan of the Jewish state's top entertainers for appearance on his "Toast of the Town" program and coast-to-coast tour of the United States under the auspices of the ZOA. Their tour is expected to take them to more than 50 communities in furtherance of the Zionist program for Israel-American cultural exchange. Twentieth Century Fox Studios will audition them when they appear in Los Angeles. The tour will be climaxed with a performance in New York as part of the ZOA's Israel Tenth Anniversary celebration.

W. J. C. Reports China Jewry Dwindles Rapidly

Within one year the Jewish community in Communist China has decreased by about twenty-five percent, according to information received by the World Jewish Congress in New York. One community organization, in Tientsin, has ceased to function, although a small number of Jews still remain in that city. A report from the Council of the Jewish Community in Shanghai puts the total number of Jews in China registered with the Council at 294 as of June 30, 1958. Exactly one year ago the total was 397. The new report states that there are 84 Jews in Shanghai; 32 in Tientsin; and 178 in Harbin. Comparative 1957 figures for these three centers were: 109, 55; and 229. Last year four Jews were listed as living in Dalny and Mukden. There is no reference to these towns in the 1958 survey.

In Tientsin, which once had a Jewish population of 2,000, the local Hebrew Association has ceased to function after more than 50 years of activity. The gradual diminution of the community made the liquidation of the Association necessary and steps in this direction were initiated late in 1957. The furniture, fixtures, and other items belonging to the Association were sold by public auction, and the civil authorities were notified of the Association's intention to close. The one remaining Sefer Torah was transferred to Israel, the archives placed in the offices of the Shanghai Council for safe keeping, and in January of this year, the Tientsin community's central body was totally liquidated.

The welfare of those Jews remaining in Tientsin is now the responsibility of the Shanghai Jewish Council. This body finds itself increasingly concerned with the plight of its own dwindling community, almost twenty-five of whom have to be supplied with free meals. A shelter house and a camp provide accommodation for about 20 needy members of the community. More than fifty percent of the Jews of Shanghai receive medical care at the expense of the Council. In addition, the Council ensures Hebrew education for the eight or nine children of school age.

Despite their depleted numbers, the Shanghai Community notes "encouraging" attendances at its Sabbath and holiday services. As in preceding years, the report received by the WJC notes, matzohs were baked locally and distributed free of charge to all needy Jews in the city. "The highest grade of wheat flour was kindly allotted by the Food Administration Bureau," the report states, adding that "sympathetic cooperation was rendered by the bakery. The matzohs were prepared in accordance with our religious requirements and under the supervision of the Council." Tientsin Jews received a supply of the matzohs made in Shanghai. The Harbin Jewish Community, which conducts its charitable activities and maintains its institutions independently, was able to hold daily synagogue services, the report states.

Very recently, the Chinese authorities informed the Jewish Council in Shanghai that no further burials should be made in any of the existing four Jewish cemeteries. This was followed by allocation to the Council of a separate plot in the public cemetery and by a request that the Wei Ming Lu Cemetery, established in 1917, and the Hwang Pe Lu Cemetery, established in 1862, be removed to new sites outside the city. Between them the two cemeteries house 2,000 graves. A similar request was made of the Tientsin community in 1956 and, by November 1957, 559 graves had been removed to a new site. In Harbin, the local authorities have decreed that all cemeteries be removed beyond the city limits. This affects the Jewish community, whose cemetery will have to be transferred.

purchasing power). The prophets were rebuked. What, said the kings and economic advisers, is the connection between the word of religion and a moral God on the one hand and physical and financial prosperity on the other? What is for God shall never mix with what is for economic man.

Don't ask Moses, nor Elijah, nor Amos, about the manner in which morality demonstrates its practicality; ask your credit manager. If one commandment can bring so much blessing, and its violation so much destruction, shall we not avoid the disruption of our families by following the Fifth and the Seventh and Chapter XVIII of Leviticus; shall we not avoid the destruction of our own mental equilibrium by following the Tenth and Leviticus XIX: 18; shall we not prevent the disintegration of our entire society by following them all? How many more skeptical generation must grovel along blindly waiting for painful experience to justify the practical wisdom of the Bible's way of life?

When shall we learn the lesson of the sukka (the tabernacle), that strength and prosperity originate within ourselves, not from walls or organizations or systems? Let us keep the sukka around us, reminding that behind every wall, under every roof, behind all statistics, are you and I.

They are also giving active support to the principle that advertising space should be bought and sold only on the basis of verified information — a principle that has contributed in large measure to the interests of all advertisers.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is able to claim membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

ADD VERMOUTH

Wherever your eyes light on those two delectable words in a recipe, think of Bright's Dry Vermouth or Bright's Sweet Vermouth, as the case may be. When you use either of those two great Canadian wines you are using as fine Vermouths as are bottled anywhere.

The only way to prove that statement is for yourself, deliberately. But here's a hint. Both of Bright's great Vermouths are carefully blended and carefully aged wines made with 12 rare and expensive herbs imported from four continents.

There can be little doubt in any reasonable mind that a bottle of Bright's Dry Vermouth and a bottle of Bright's Sweet Vermouth are assets in any bar or wine cellar, anywhere.

What Brings Prosperity?: The Sukka Gives The Answer

BY RABBI SAMUEL M. BURSTEIN, AGUDATH ISRAEL SYNAGOGUE, OTTAWA, ONTARIO.

Sukkos, holiday of harvest time prosperity, is especially welcome this year. It reassures North Americans that even in times of economic downturn our continent is so wealthy that none must starve, that we are still mighty enough to "ride to the poor house in private cars". We have had a minor scare, during the recession of 1957-8, which tested governmental guarantees against economic breakdown. The systems and controls which were developed in order to prevent a recurrence of the 1930's the "built in correctives" for financial dislocation, have somehow not worked to expectations.

The law of supply and demand was long ago put to rest by subsidies and support prices; prices did not go down, savings were not decreased; few people parted with luxuries. Federal banks jockeyed around with the interest rates, governments considered spending or saving, tax reductions or balanced budgets, more military spending or more emphasis on civilian needs and housing.

As the systems and techniques became supposedly more and more automatic, one factor was increasingly overlooked, a factor the sukka (booth) calls attention to: the human individual and his own efforts. The strength of the sukka comes not from walls and structure and planning but from the individual within it. The individual, whether called citizen or consumer, is still the prime mover in society. More depends on him than our economic theorists imagine. With the individual rests the key to all our welfare.

Our economy is not based exclusively on economic system, productive capacity, bank rates, nor government spending; its strength comes from personal behaviour, from the mutual trust among members of society. Flexibility and speed of transaction, for example, the basis of the efficiency of modern commerce, is built on the reliability of verbal agreement. Only on this continent are huge commitments made by word of mouth or telephone.

Instalment buying, which properly regulated keeps the wheels in industry and trade turning, is based on credit; this, in turn, rests on something rather strange and ephemeral. To be a blessing and not a curse, credit cannot be allowed to exceed the resources of the purchaser. Credit bureaux exercise some measure of control over the dangerous over-extension which explodes the bubble when they advise on the proper and legitimate granting of trust. But the turnover resulting from mutual trust does not stem solely from the actions of credit managers.

Mr. A. D. Sinclair, manager of the Credit Bureau of Ottawa and Hull, recently drew my attention to some interesting figures on the honesty of the average citizen: 70% of the population pays its bills without delay; 20% require additional dunning. If more than 10% must be kept in line by the threat of court action and processes of law, buying and selling can no longer operate efficiently. If it were necessary to resort to force to implement the payment of accounts, the added expense and time would destroy all the value of the credit system, and all other economic plans and techniques will fail.

Over 70% of our population is honest and trustworthy, and will not undertake to purchase something they feel cannot pay for ultimately. Over 70% of our population will not try to cheat when they apply for loans, when they give references, when they borrow or when they undertake a verbal agreement. This is a fantastic majority. The landslides of Roosevelt and of Diefenbaker were based on a much smaller representation, on a 55%-45% split of the voters.

The bedrock of any prosperity we enjoy is the honesty of our citizenry. One is almost tempted to say: on the instinctive honesty of our citizenry. A trait so widespread must be inborn, or so it would seem at first glance. It is certainly not in our genetic make-up, for such traits of social behaviour are not to be found in chromosomes. It is independent of force and policing threats; even in the absence of police supervision most of our societies can continue to run (viz Israel after the British evacuation and Norway during its recent police strike).

The basis of our honesty, which in turn is the basis of mutual trust, which in turn is the basis of all social living and secure economy, the basis of all this is the prohibition against theft, associated with the Eighth Commandment of the Ten. As explained in the Midrash, "theft" includes more than petty thievery; this commandment proscribes cheating, lying about one's resources, putting on a false front, claiming non-existent wealth, and so on. With all the criticism directed against the Anglo-Saxon Puritan tradition, our high level of honesty (which bears a direct causal relationship to the success of our social and economic order) stems primarily from the Puritan influence on our moral and ethical habits and from the respect for the Ten Commandments they have instilled in our culture.

It may seem heretical, at first, to claim a practical advantage for morality. We are accustomed to think of morality as idealistic character training, as inculcating traits of behaviour because they are "right", without regard to their practicality. Judaism defends its morality with the assumption that morality "pays off". The second paragraph of the "Shma," read by the faithful Jew three times a day, presents the reward for moral living and warns of the penalty for immoral conduct. But this promise is given in the plural. An individual may benefit by being dishonest, and another suffer for being honorable. But a society in which more than 10% of the people are unreliable will fall to pieces.

Throughout the Bible we are cautioned that following the word of God will guarantee practical blessing and prosperity; we are warned (in the plural) that disobedience to the word of God will bring economic dislocation. We have been accepting that principle on faith for so many generations; along come our contemporary credit bureaus (including the Canadian Association of Credit Bureaus which is the source of our figures) and supply statistical proof for that age-old article of Jewish faith.

Our faith in the promise of the "Shma" has been tested through the ages. One of the earliest recorded challenges was Baal worship. This cult promised prosperity (which is the meaning of a fertility cult) via the performance of specific acts. These actions had a direct connection with the fertility of the fields, the source of ancient prosperity. By imitative magic of human fertility acts in the fields and by the outpouring of human blood, nature was to be compelled to bring forth its fruits. This was "scientific", there was a definite cause-and-effect relationship; the actions were in the same area and along the same lines of endeavor as were the results.

Poor Elijah, trying to prove a connection between moral behaviour and economic life! He pleaded for obedience to the moral preachments, not to steal, not to cheat, not to violate the Eighth Commandment. The later prophets begged their people not to charge interest nor to exploit the poor (which destroys consumer
